ABOUT THE HONORARY DOCTORATE DEGREE

An honorary doctorate degree is an award that recognizes individuals for their contributions to the society, professional space, specific schools and the world at large. The practice of providing honorary degrees dates back to the Middle Ages, when for various reasons a University might be persuaded, or otherwise see fit, to grant exemption from some or all of the usual statutory requirements for the award of a degree. The earliest honorary degree on record was awarded to Lionel Woodville in the late 1470s by the University of Oxford. He later became Bishop of Salisbury.

In the United States, the Doctor of Philosophy (Ph.D.) degree was first conferred as an honorary degree, at Bucknell University in 1852; not until 1861 did any American university award an earned Ph.D. (Yale University being the first to do so). Over one hundred institutions in the United States conferred honorary Ph.D. degrees in the 19th century, to more than seven hundred recipients.

WHAT CAN YOU DO WITH AN HONORARY DOCTORATE DEGREE?

Earning an honorary doctorate brings social and professional privileges, along with prestige and recognition, such as:

- Formal acknowledgment of high honor
- Use of the title "Dr." before your name
- Inclusion in achievements and awards sections

WHY DO GLOBAL UNIVERSITY OF BOSTON GIVE OUT HONORARY DOCTORATE DEGREES ?

The Global University of Boston is committed to the upliftment of the society as a whole and recognizing the contributions of others who are relentlessly engaging directly with the people at large for their real development. We provide the honorary doctorate degree for a number of reasons, including:

Gratitude: If activists and/or organizations are directly involved in the activity of social upliftment by providing free education/food/shelter/social awareness campaign/medical help to the underprivileged then in return, we bestow upon them an honorary doctorate degree to thank them for their contributions.

Recognition: When we notice that someone has made a beneficial impact on the professional world through his/her selfless efforts in science and technology/human resource developmental activities/industrial revolution/ agricultural development/ financial development/ Social engineering/ sports activities/arts/literature/academics etc. then we choose to recognize them with an honorary doctorate degree.
